Seizure At Swim Meet

Earlier that day, it was just as a swim meet would go. Not for one swimmer. She would later that meet, get a seizure. As the last heats were finishing up, the clock struck 3 o'clock on Thursday afternoon. Our swimmer, had just finished her race. Minutes, perhaps seconds later, she fell to the ground. A group huddled around, whilst her dad picked her up and set her down in a chair. "Her eyes were rolled back in her head," Claims one witness. After a couple of minutes passed, two ambulances, 1 cop car, and a fire truck, pulled up at the pool. They rushed over getting to the victim as fast as possible. They put her on a stretcher and wheeled her out. Her parents sprinted to the car, following the ambulance.

Once the silence had ended, the announcer came up to the microphone and presented the information that he had obtained. "The girl you just saw being evacuated out, had suffered from a seizure."

After doing some investigating online, I found that it is very rare to get a seizure from heat exhaustion. Especially swimming at a swim meet! This event was a freak accident that is yet to be explained. She is now in recovery, to make sure that this does not happen again. This is a mystery that can not be solved. Yet.

Local neighborhood is having some renovating done, and the residents want nothing to do with it! Earlier last week, a couple of kids were out playing in the yard, when they saw a bulldozer drive by their house. Out of curiosity, they followed it, only to find, that it was digging up some mud by the lake. When they came back home, they elaborated on what they saw. Their parents immediately called up the head of the neighborhood, and asked what was going on. When the parents went down to look for themselves, there was metal and nails left everywhere. Not only were they renovating without letting the neighborhood know, but also leaving dangerous objects just lying around. The neighborhood board meeting was held later this week, and no one in the neighborhood knew what was going on. The workers are yet to be known, as well as their cause and motive. More investigating will be done on this topic and may be posted in the next issue.
